We rarely take the time to reflect and realise what’s good in our lives.

For most of us, it is our families – the main source of our happiness and our sense of belonging.

This report looks at how much family members support and depend on each other and how financially secure people are feeling.

While some people are managing well financially, others are just about managing. Many are supporting both their children and their parents, often making sacrifices in time and money.

Despite these strong connections, many people have not had important family conversations about their long-term financial security if something life-changing were to happen to them. Even fewer have plans in place to help their family cope with the unexpected.

I hope that this report will encourage you to think and talk about what makes your life good today and what you can do to secure your family’s future.

“Many people have not had important family conversations about their long-term financial security.”
Key findings

70% of people say their family’s health and wellbeing is the most important thing to them for the future.

50% of people with grown-up children (over 18) are giving them regular financial support.

54% of people with living parents are giving them regular financial support.

67% of people with children would choose paying for their child’s university/higher education over their own retirement fund.

33% of people supporting someone financially feel they themselves are just about managing or not managing at all well.

72% of people supporting someone financially say their family would not manage well if they had to significantly reduce their support to them.

69% of people supporting someone financially do not have insurance that would pay them a regular sum if they had a serious illness or accident that prevented them from working.

22% of people supporting someone financially have never had a conversation with anyone about long-term financial security if something were to happen to them.
Family matters
What’s good?

What’s most important for the future?

- My family’s health and wellbeing: 70%
- Achieving my and my family’s aspirations: 40%
- Providing for my own or my family’s future financial security: 39%

Family is a huge part of our lives and a source of great happiness.

Seven in ten (70%) people say that their family’s health and wellbeing is the most important thing to them for the future.

Forty per cent say that achieving their own or providing for their family’s aspirations, and 39% that providing for their own or their family’s future financial security, are the most important things.
Family is for life

Putting family first often means providing regular financial support to them.

Almost three-quarters (72%) of people are giving regular financial support to someone in their family.

More than four in five (84%) are supporting their children under 18 financially. Half (50%) of those with grown-up children are supporting them financially.

Over half (54%) of people with living parents are providing regular financial support to them.

Providing this level of support for family members can take a toll on people’s finances, lifestyle and emotional wellbeing.

People regularly supporting someone financially in their family are spending over half (55%) of their disposable income on others.

Among those with children under 18, almost half (45%) of their disposable income and non-working time is spent on them.

Even people financially supporting grown-up children spend over a third (37%) of their disposable income on them and 31% of their non-working time doing things for them.

People financially supporting parents are spending similar proportions of their disposable income (32%) and non-working time (30%) on them.

Q. In a typical month, after you’ve paid your bills and necessary outgoings, what proportion of your remaining income do you spend on? Please exclude money that you may be saving or investing each month for you or others. Q. In a typical month (excluding work/employment), approx. what proportion of your time do you spend doing things with or for? (Base: All providing regular support to children under 18, all providing regular support to children over 18, all providing regular support to parents)
Supporting family members financially can be a strain as well as a source of satisfaction.

Nearly half (46%) have put off their own aspirations to support others, while over two-fifths (41%) feel guilty spending money on themselves instead of using it to help their family.

However, almost two-thirds believe that they are a good provider for their family (65%) and feel appreciated for the support they give others (61%).

Emotional strain

- 46%: I've put off realising my own aspirations to support others
- 41%: I feel guilty spending money on myself when I should be using it to help my family

Feel good factor

- 65%: I feel like I’m a good provider for my family
- 61%: I feel appreciated for the support I give others

Q. To what extent do you agree or disagree with the following statements? A. Agree somewhat or strongly (Base: All providing regular support to someone in their family)
Financial pressures

Supporting family members can come at a cost.

More than a quarter (29%) of people financially supporting someone in their family say they have less money to do what they want or had to cut back on treats for themselves.

A fifth (20%) had to withdraw money from their savings or investments.

Just over one in ten (12%) have taken on more debt to enable them to support their family financially.

Financial impact of providing regular financial support to someone in the family

- I’ve got less money to do what I want to do: 29%
- I’ve had to increase my hours or take on a full-time job: 16%
- I’ve had to cut back on treats for myself: 29%
- I feel financially drained: 15%
- I’ve had to withdraw from my savings/investments: 20%
- I’ve incurred more debt: 12%

Q. What financial impact, if any, has providing this support had on you? (Base: All providing regular support to someone in their family)
Life support

Providing financial assistance to family members can mean covering costs in areas which may not have been anticipated.

People are supporting their grown-up children with everything from education (59%) to everyday living costs (49%) and medical and dental care (33%). However, more than three in five (61%) parents believe their grown-up children should stand on their own two feet financially.

The most significant way that people financially support their parents (71%) is with everyday costs such as utility bills, buying groceries and home repairs.

50% of people with grown-up children are giving them regular financial support with...

- Education 59%
- Everyday living costs 71%
- Medical/dental care 39%
- Holidays 31%
- Rent/accommodation 25%
- Social care/carer 21%

54% of people with parents are giving them regular financial support with...

- Education
- Everyday living costs
- Medical/dental care
- Holidays
- Rent/accommodation
- Social care/carer

Q. Are you giving regular financial support to any of the following? A. Children over 18. (Base: All providing regular support to children over 18) A. Parent or partner’s parents. (Base: All providing regular support to parents)

Q. Do you give any of the following types of financial support to...? (Base: All providing regular support to children over 18, All providing regular support to parents)

Q. We’d now like you to imagine some situations and think about what you’d do. Which of the following do you most agree with? A. I think my adult children should stand on their own two feet financially. (Base: All providing regular support to children over 18)
Tough choices

Supporting others in your family can mean having to make some hard financial choices. If people had to choose between paying for their children’s university/higher education over their own retirement fund, two-thirds (67%) would choose to support their children.

A similar proportion (66%) would prioritise paying for their elderly parents’ health and social care over paying into their own retirement fund.

This choice is even harder for those with both parents and children.

If they had to choose, people would prioritise their family over themselves

Q. And, if you were in a situation where you could only pay for one of the following, what would you choose?

(Base: All with children of any age, All with parents, All with children any age and parents)
People across the 13 countries surveyed make different choices.

Mexicans are more likely to choose to pay for their children’s university/higher education over their elderly parents health and social care (61% compared to 39%). This compares to people in the UAE and Taiwan who are more likely to choose to support their elderly parents over their grown-up children.

Q. And, if you were in a situation where you could only pay for one of the following, what would you choose? (Base: All with children any age and parents)

Would choose to pay for children’s university/higher education

Financial ups and downs
Managing today

There are varying degrees of financial security among people giving regular financial support to someone in their family.

How financially secure do you feel today?

- Managing well or very well: 31%
- Managing quite well: 36%
- Just about managing on a day-to-day basis: 24%
- Not managing at all well or just about managing with support from family or social benefits: 9%
Managing tomorrow?

The expectations of people at the two ends of the financial security spectrum suggest increasing polarisation.

Over half of people supporting someone in their family and managing well or very well financially expect their situation to improve in the next three years.

This compares to over a quarter (28%) of those not managing at all well or just about managing with support, who think that their position will worsen.

Q. Do you think that your financial position in the next 3 years will...?
(Base: All providing regular financial support to someone in their family and managing well or very well. All providing regular financial support to someone in their family and not managing at all well or just about managing with support from family or social benefits)
Life carries many risks, which can put people’s financial security under pressure, especially those supporting someone in their family.

The most impactful risks they see are becoming unemployed (37%), a sharp increase in cost of living (35%) and developing a serious illness such as cancer (32%).

These risks were rated differently across the 13 countries surveyed, with the widest divergences in the health-related risks.

In the case of developing a serious illness, only 12% of those in the UAE rated this as one of their highest risks, compared to 52% in China. The risk of a partner or family member becoming seriously ill is rated as a top risk by only 13% in the UAE compared to 43% in Mexico.

Q. Which of the following do you think would most impact your financial security if they were to happen to you? A. Ranked 1st, 2nd or 3rd

(Base: All providing regular financial support to someone in their family)
Knock-on effects

Unexpected life events can have knock-on financial consequences for the whole family.

Just under a quarter (23%) of people supporting someone in their family say their dependants would not manage at all financially, if they developed a long-term illness or disability. One in five (20%) believe their dependants would not manage at all, if they or their partner died.

Less than three in ten (28%) expect that dependants would manage well if they had to significantly reduce their level of financial support to them.

Q. How well would those who depend on you manage financially if any of the following were to happen to you? (Base: All providing regular financial support to someone in their family)

- If you developed a long-term illness or disability:
  - My family would manage well: 26%
  - My family would just about manage: 51%
  - My family wouldn’t manage at all: 23%

- If you or your partner died:
  - My family would manage well: 32%
  - My family would just about manage: 48%
  - My family wouldn’t manage at all: 20%

- If you had to significantly reduce your level of financial support to them:
  - My family would manage well: 28%
  - My family would just about manage: 55%
  - My family wouldn’t manage at all: 17%
Planning for the unexpected

Many people financially supporting someone in the family do not have insurance in place if something unexpected were to happen to them.

Almost seven in ten (69%) do not have a policy that would pay them a regular sum if they had a serious illness or accident which prevented them from working.

More than two-thirds (68%) do not have a policy that would pay a lump sum if they contracted a serious illness such as cancer.

Just under two-thirds (63%) do not have a policy that would pay out a lump sum to take care of their family in the event of their death.

In all three cases, those in Taiwan are most likely to have insurance.

Among people providing regular financial support to someone in the family...

- 69% don’t have a policy that would pay them a regular sum if they had a serious illness or accident which prevented them from working.
  - Highest: Argentina 81%
  - Lowest: Taiwan 50%

- 68% don’t have a policy that would pay them a lump sum if they contracted a serious illness such as cancer.
  - Highest: USA 87%
  - Lowest: Taiwan 37%

- 63% don’t have a policy that would pay out a lump sum to take care of their family in the event of death.
  - Highest: Argentina 80%
  - Lowest: Taiwan 39%

Q. Finally, which of these insurance products or benefits do you currently have or would consider in the future? (Base: All proving regular financial support to someone in their family)
Let’s talk
Important conversations

Among people who are supporting someone in their family, those who are managing well financially are more likely to have had a conversation about long-term financial security should something happen to them, than those who are not managing well.

Over one in five (22%) have never had a conversation about long-term financial security with anyone and only 31% who are parents have had this conversation with their children.

Fewer than one in ten (9%) have spoken with a professional adviser and this ranges from 3% in the UAE to 14% in the USA and India.

Reluctance to talk about what might happen in the future may help to explain why most do not have insurance in place.

Among people providing support to someone in their family...

16% of those managing well financially have never had a conversation

30% of those not managing well financially have never had a conversation

Q. Have you spoken with any of the following about long-term financial security if something were to happen to you? A. Your children (Base: All with children of any age). A. Never had this conversation. A. Professional adviser (Base: All providing regular financial support to someone in their family). A. Never had this conversation (Base: All providing regular financial support to someone in their family and managing well or very well. All providing regular financial support to someone in their family and not managing at all well or just about managing with support from family or social benefits).
Triggering the conversation

Among people financially supporting someone in their family, there were different triggers for those who had a conversation about long-term financial security should something happen to them.

For more than a third (35%), reaching a particular age when it became relevant was a key trigger for the conversation. For more than one in five (22%) who are parents, their children reaching a certain age prompted them to have this conversation.

Discussing long-term financial security comes more naturally to some than others. Nearly a third (32%) initiated a conversation as a result of reviewing their financial or life plans. A similar proportion (31%) had the conversation because they are organised and like order in their life.

Futureproofing

When it comes to making specific provisions for the future, fewer than one in five (19%) of those financially supporting someone in their family have a legal guardian in place to look after any dependants should something happen. Even fewer have a will or testament (18%) or a power of attorney (17%) in place to make legal decisions on their behalf should anything happen.

Just over one in five (21%) who are parents have money set aside to leave to their children to ensure their financial security.

Among people providing regular financial support to someone in the family...

(all with children of any age)

Q. Which of the following, if any, do you have in place now? (Base: All providing regular support to someone in their family)
Q. And which of these apply to you? (Base: All with children of any age)
Here are some important insights and practical actions drawn from the research findings, which may help people better prepare their family to face the future.

1. Identify your priorities
   - 70% of people say their family’s health and wellbeing is the most important thing to them for the future.
   - Think about your priorities in life. Make sure you have a financial plan in place that addresses your needs as well as those of your family. Don’t neglect your own aspirations when planning for the future.

2. Assess your finances
   - 33% of people supporting someone financially feel they themselves are just about managing or not managing at all well.
   - Consider how financially secure you feel. Think about whether any financial support you are giving to others is likely to increase or decrease in the future and if you need to update your financial plan.

3. Plan for the whole family
   - 72% of people supporting someone financially say their family would not manage well if they had to significantly reduce their support to them.
   - Unexpected life events can have knock-on effects for the whole family. Bear this in mind when reviewing if you have enough financial protection in place.

4. Talk about the future
   - 84% of people who are supporting someone yet managing well financially have had a conversation about their long-term financial security should something happen to them.
   - Make time to talk to your family about the future. Discuss what could happen to them if you experience a life-changing circumstance and what financial safeguards you have in place. If you need help, seek professional advice.
The research

The Power of Protection is an independent consumer research study into global protection needs and trends, commissioned by HSBC. It provides authoritative insights into people’s concerns about the future and how they are protecting themselves financially, around the world.

This report, Facing the future, is the third in the series and represents the views of 13,122 people in 13 countries.

Country reports are also available.

Since The Power of Protection study began in 2016, more than 30,000 people have been surveyed worldwide.

Survey

The findings are based on a survey of those aged 25 and over from a nationally representative online sample in 12 countries and a nationally representative face-to-face sample in the UAE. The research was conducted by Kantar TNS between March and May 2017.

Figures have been rounded to the nearest whole number.

The 13 countries and territories are:
- Argentina
- China
- France
- Hong Kong
- India
- Indonesia
- Malaysia
- Mexico
- Singapore
- Taiwan
- United Arab Emirates
- United Kingdom
- United States
